
ZwillGen Welcomes National Security Lawyer

Washington, D.C., May 1, 2017 – ZwillGen is pleased to announce that well-known national security lawyer, Carrie Cordero, has joined ZwillGen’s Washington, D.C. office.

Carrie joins ZwillGen having previously worked at the U.S. Department of Justice, National Security Division, where she worked with the FBI and other Intelligence Community agencies on counterterrorism and counterintelligence investigations, and appeared before the Foreign Intelligence Surveillance Court. Carrie also served in a joint duty capacity at the Office of the Director of National Intelligence, Office of General Counsel, where she worked on the legislation, implementation, and oversight of the FISA Amendments Act of 2008. “Carrie is a distinguished advocate and leading voice on national security legal and policy issues,” said Marc Zwillinger, ZwillGen’s Founder and Managing Member. “Her background on FISA and national security matters will substantially benefit ZwillGen’s clients who face legal issues related to national security process or who need help when interacting with the intelligence apparatus.”

Carrie’s practice focuses on national security law, homeland security law, and related surveillance, privacy, cybersecurity, insider threat, and data protection issues. “Balancing consumer privacy with national security is a delicate but critical process,” said Carrie Cordero. “ZwillGen is doing leading work in the national security, law, and technology space, and I’m excited to join the team and work to guide clients through difficult situations.”
